

Half-life is used as a measure of radioactivity because a radioactive sample will never lose radioactivity entirely.